

Exact frequencies of medium wave broadcasters, current as of 9 April 2024

If one knows the exact frequency of a medium wave (MW) transmitter, accurate to 0.1 Hertz if possible, then that unique frequency might provide a "fingerprint", a piece of evidence that a signal received in a data set is originating at a specific transmitter. That piece of evidence could be used in another data set to help identify the same signal.

In the medium wave DXing hobby, there is quite a long history of attempting to identify these "fingerprints", often referred to as "MW offsets", indicating that the reading is offset from the assigned nominal frequency. Present-day software defined radio (SDR) data provides further opportunities for extracting this information, especially if the SDR's internal oscillator is locked to an accurate frequency reference. The enclosed "Offsets on Medium Wave – some Notes and Examples.pdf" by Nils Schiffhauer, DK8OK, provides some detailed background about deriving and making use of fine scale measurement of the frequencies of received signals.

In the case of SDRs not locked to a frequency reference, but otherwise stable, it may be possible to provide corrections in software to all observed frequencies within the passband of recorded data sets, if there are signals with known accurate frequencies within that passband. Software such as Jaguar (<https://jaguars.kapsi.fi/>) and WavViewDX (<https://rweiss.de/dxer/tools.html>) are capable of supplying corrections of this nature.

MW DXers have been contributing observed offsets to a database at <https://www.mwlist.org/mwoffset.php> for many years, and courtesy of Günter Lorenz, DL3GLF, and MWList, this is a snapshot of all offsets observed from MW stations worldwide that were current as of April 9, 2024, the day after the total solar eclipse. The significant digits shown indicate the level of confidence in accuracy of the readings.

There is no indication here of how long before April 9, 2024 these readings had been documented, unfortunately. That information is available by signing in to MWlist.org
